barraged that unless an effort ub extra were made, known. The library and armoury thus "hazard of the die" is of comparatively recent bought back were not, as has been sup origin. posed, vested in Scott's representatives, but were plused by the subscribers under a trust, the trus-38 being the Dean and Council of the Faculty Advocates, Edinburgh. An advocate is the equivalent of what in England is called a barris-ter; and the Dean and Council of the Faculty are nlways men who have distinguished themselves at the Scottish Bar, and out of whose number the judges for the Supreme Confis are chosen. The Faculty may therefore be regarded as one of the highest and most select public bodies in Scotland -a body, by the way, of which Scott himself was a member. The trust, therefore, that was thus formed for the reception and oversight of the Scott library and relics is one in which the pubwas formed it was made a condition—which condition was accepted by the hoirs of entail of Abbotslord—that the latter should provide accommodation for the articles, and that these should be open, under regulations, to the inspection of the public. All this was done and embodied in duly executed deeds. with the result that the Dean and Council of the Faculty of Advocates have ever since been the virtual oustodians and possessors of the Abbotsford library and ouriosities. This it is so far satisfactory to the public to know. Fears have often been expressed that the time might come when that magnificent collection should be broken up and dispersed, and it has even been urged in the public prints from time to that the nation should, to guard against this, purchase Abbotsford House and its contents. Any fear of such a danger may now be set aside, for the public body to whom the collection is now found to belong is itself a torical institution, and the relies in their keeping are as safe as if they had been in the oustedy of the Government itself .- Manchester

A "practical joker," with ventriloquial powers, caused great excitement in the Rue Montmartre, Paris, the other night. He directed his voice down into an open drain, from which soon proceeded loud ories for "Help!" The police arrived, and sent a small party of navvies to explore the subterranean regions, but it was all to no purpose. The more the navvies explored the louder became the appeals for assistance, until at last the street was congested with people, who had to be kept back from the mouth of the drain by a cordon of constables. The ventriloquist being pushed back from the drain with others, the cries for "Help" ceased. The joker was eventually discovered, but disappeared, hetly pursued by police and public.

The recent epidemic appears to have had a considerable effect on the minds of that large class of persons who are prous to put off the making of their wills. Ever since the epide nic Hongkong Rope..... set in there has been a steady increase in the H. & W. In February alone, though it numbered only twenty-eight days, no fewer than 1,633 wills were thus formally consigned to the registrar's fire-proof rooms. Ordinarily the annual number deposited is not much over 12,000, and these are, of course, a very small proportion of the wills actually made. the ordinary course with the testators being to retain their wills in their own hands or in those of their solictors.

A wicked old man, in spite of his venerable beard, is Emile F of Paris. He has been earning a living for no one knows how long with no other outfit than a slender stick, with one end smeared with glue. This stick the aged rascal used to slyly insert in the poorboxes of metropolitan churches when the rest the congregation were absorbed in prayer. Then carefully extracting the novel fishing apparatus, he would remove the coins which had stuck fast, and repeat the operation. He tried this little game, once too often, however, on Sunday at Saint Sulpice. One of the Suisses. who guard the sanctuary pounced upon him en flagrant delit, and had him promptly walked off to the station. / Emile will be able for some time to come to practise catebing flux with his sticky apparatus through iron bars.

> Twenty-five years ago the exuberant vitalit of students had a vile habit of spending its energies in the unhanging of gates, in the tearing up of sidewalks, in those multitudinous oscapades with accounts of which the alumni of '50 or '60, with more or less shame, are now apt to regale one another, says the Forum. It is certain that a great change has taken place. Nothing, is more true than there is vastly less of riotons disorder in our colleges than there was a generation ago. What has been the cause of this?. The answer, I have no doubt, is to be found very largely, if not chiefly, in the moral power of regularly prescribed gymnastic exercise and athletic sports.
